

Byron Hanke Fellowship

For Graduate Research on Community Associations

The Foundation for Community Association Research is proud to support an annual fellowship, available to graduate students working on topics related to community associations. Hanke fellows can receive a stipend of up to $5,000 and are expected to prepare a research project on community associations.

Eligibility Requirements

Applicants must be enrolled in an accredited master's, doctoral, or law program in the United States of America or Canada. Students of all disciplines are welcome to apply for the Hanke Fellowship, provided their studies and the topic of their proposed research project relate to community associations.

Areas and Topics of Study

Papers submitted for the Byron Hanke Fellowship may come from a wide range of academic disciplines, including law, economics, sociology, and urban planning. These disciplines are appropriate areas of graduate studies for a Hanke Fellowship, along with any others which the Foundation may be persuaded are relevant to community associations.

The Foundation is especially interested in substantive papers from the social sciences, which place community association housing within political or economic organizational models.

Application

As part of the Hanke Fellowship's application, the student must commit to research and write a substantial paper dealing with community associations or common-interest communities. The paper should be on a scale appropriate for a master's thesis, doctoral dissertation, or a law review quality article.
